To whom it may concern: State Water Board

Dear Sir or Madam,

I just found out that members of the State Water Board have come up with some "CoCoRa-momy" idea about diverting some 35% of snowmelt and rainfall for what they (meaning the Water Board) call "environmental purposes".

Have any of you realized the impact that would have on some of our primary industries such as agriculture, and dairies around those three rivers. We're not all "silicon valley" businesses! We also have some trouble with our ground water amounts. Less ground water causes the surface land to sink, re: New Orleans or here, in a place called Death Valley.

I think you should rethink this shortsighted & obviously not well thought out plan. That is unless you absolutely want higher water and electricity costs, not to mention prime farm land laying fallow and producing a fine crop of weeds.

Sincerely, a very concerned citizen and taxpayer:

Linda De York
