

State Water Resources Control Board

To Whom It May Concern:

I am increasingly concerned about the continuing progress toward the delta tunnel project. The biologists say it will further endanger species already on the endangered species list, and that would be clearly illegal.

To break federal law is illegal. Regardless of social or political reasons for sending more water to the former desert in Westside District, or to cities needing water, it is not illegal to insist that those needing water find other, legal, solutions. The available options may be more expensive and may create hardships, and that is regrettable, but the law is the law.

In addition, there are strong moral arguments for continuing to protect endangered species in general, and specifically those with economic value such as salmon.

Please stop this project!
